Rap on the Cover Wrap

Imagine my disappointment when the March issue of the Texas Bar Journal arrived wrapped in a brochure for a legal publishing company. While it is true that other magazines wrap themselves in advertisements, there are two differences:

First, they give the reader the option to remove the wrapping without damaging the magazine; Second, the legal profession should be above such blatant commercialism. I do not feel comfortable displaying this month's journal in public for my clients and potential clients to see. Please reconsider any decision to permit a single advertiser this much control over what your members see.

Nail on the Head

Kudos to the Texas Bar Journal for the last two issues. Roland Johnson hit the nail on the head with "Listening to Understand" (February, p. 90) and David Fisher further seared the nail with "Elevating the Rule of Right" (March, p. 168.) We would not need disciplinary rules and regulations if each of us could learn to listen more and just do the right thing. The article about Arturo C. Gonzales was inspirational (February, p. 88). The public is rarely told of compassionate lawyers like Mr. Gonzales. There are still many Atticus Finches in our profession, and he is one of them. Top all of that off with the great information about social media (March, p. 178). An old guy like me doesn't always get this Internet/social media stuff, but this series of articles is a keeper. Thanks for the good work.
